the following from the Union:

The Firmin Jack Comedy company has scored a full week of successive successes and grown in popularity with each performance. This company did not come here heraldyl from afar, nor were their praises trumpeted in the flash manner of to-day; but they came relying on their own merit and possessing the conscious dignity of superior excellence. Their coming has been both a surprise and a delight. Old theater goers, men and women of taste and ability to pass critical judgment, unite in their commendation.

They had a fine matinee audience for East Lynne" yesterday afternoon, for the Clympic, with its popular prices, is fast becoming a favorite rendezvous with the ladies. The cast for the play was the same as on its previous presentation.

At night the company gave their second presentation of "Falstaff," and Mr. John Jack's interpretation was so excellently intellectual it delighted the devotees of Shakespeare and the closest students of one of his most marvelous works. The most critical analysis of Mr. Jack in this character does not shake the fact that he is the greatest interpreter and the acknowleged master of this, one of the most delightful of dramatic creations; while even indifferent observation was lared into cordial admira-

"T. E. B." writes as follows from Olmstead, Ky., to the New York Tobacco Leaf: The week ending the 3d inst. was centinuously rainy, followed by cold weather and several light frosts. One-half of the crop remained in the field at the beginning of the rainy seasons, most of which was only partially matured and much of it quite green, it was started to growing again by the rains, becoming quite green, and most of the scare caused by the frosts of the 5th and 6th insts. For this reason, much of the late tobacco will be of inferior quality, and with the early cutting generally light and indifferent the average or quality will be rather low.

-Nashville American: There is no doubt but that upper East Tennessee, where soils are derived from the gneissoid rocks and the Potsdam grindstones are suited for the production of as fine tobacco as can be grown in the world. All through the grown in the world. All through the general satisfaction. The music was splendid, and some of the features very commendable. The impersonation of Uncle Remus was as fine a piece of acting as we ever saw anywhere.

The music was grown in the world. All through the mountainous regions, from Johnson and Carter to Polk, soits adapted to the growth of yellow tobacco may be found. More than ten years ago we called attention to the fact that the silkiness of the tobacco grown in upper East Tennesse for shadowed the development of a most profitable industry. If the planters of that section will carefully investigate the curing and manipulation demanded for yellow tobacco, and THREE festive umbrella menders ulation demanded for yellow tobacco, and study quality instead of quantity, they will reap a golden harvest.

leaf when cured, and converts a good lear into a lug. The object of curing is to fix the qualities of texture and elasticity already acquired by the plant in its growth, and to impart to it that color which will be most desirable when it shall be ready for market. If fire or heat is to be used in curing, the plant should be allowed to wilt thoroughly; and care should be taken not to place too many plants on a stick, or the sticks too close together on the tier poles in the barn, as, if this is done, it is apt to cause house-burn; and the tobacco, when cured, is dead, lifeless, without elasticity, and of little value in the market. If the plants are large, not more than eix or eight should be hung on a stick. They should be opened out or separated on the sticks, and the sticks placed seven to nine inches apart on the tier poles, so as to allow a free passage of air. When this is done there is little danger of houseburn. If it is desired to cure the tobacco a bright color, it should be allowed to hang in the barn several days, and yellow before the fire or heat is applied. If, however, a dark color is wanted, the fice should be applied earlier, when the plant is thoroughly wilted and begids to color, as the heat serves to fix the color that has been acquired. If heat is to be used, the growth of the same of open fires, flues, or stoves; and of these methods, the from fire is greatly lessened by their use. If open fires are to be used, well-seasoned wood should be provided—of hickory or some other kind that will burn readily and steadily until consumed, and will give out the least quantity of smoke, emitting few wood should be provided—of hickory or some other kind that will burn readily and steadily until consumed, and will give out the least quantity of smoke, emitting few sparks. A moderate heat should be first used, and gradually increased to such a temperature as has been found by experience best suited to complete the process of curing the desired color; and there should be constant watchfulness to control the heat, regulate the temperature, and avoid the danger of fire from the sparks. The heat should be continued until not only the leaf but the stem is cured, as by this means the color is fixed, and no sap or moisture is left in the stem to run out into the leaf and destroy the color. When open fires are used, the barns should be close and tight, particularly the lower part of eight or ten feet from the ground, to prevent the passage of currents of-air or wind which would interfere with the ascent of the heat among the tobacco, and might endanger the barn by blowing out sparks. After the tobacco has been thoroughly cured, it is best in very damp weather to build small fires to prevent mold or mildew, and also to prevent the running of colors. We may remark that the very large, long, heavy tobacco raised in some parts of the Upper Cumberland District, particularly in the river and creek bottoms, would be better cured by fire, as it is only suited for export, and it will stand the sea voyage much better when fired. Upon the proper curing of tobacco largely depends its value on the market. The planter should therefore not spare expense in providing himself with properly constructed barns, and should spare neither labor nor care in caring.

done, as suggested above, while stripping from the staik, it must be continued when tying. It is needless to say that lug leaves may be used in tying leaf. The short of the leaf tobacco should be used for the leaf tobacco should be used for the tleaves, no matter how long the tobacco to be tied, as the butt end of a long tie-leaf extending fhrough a sample gives it a rough, bony appearance. The tie-leaf should be of the same color and quality with the tobacco tied. When the tie-leaf has been selected, fold it neatly, so that it will not exceed an inch and a quarter in with. Now take the leaves that are to compose the bundle and put them together, so that the butt ends of the stems shall be exactly even; then adjust the tie-leaf so that it will extend about one-fourth of an inch beyond the end of the stem, and carry it squarely around the bundle; wrap tightly, and secure it well, so as to make a short, neat the and a firm bundle. Care should be taken not to run the tie down the leaf, but, as stated above, to carry it squarely around. as stated above, to carry it squarely arous When tied, lay the bundle down straight When tied, hay the bundle down straight in a pile. Do not throw it down carelessly. After the tobacco has been tied, see if it is in proper order for prizing. If it is, bulk it down immediately 1 do not leave it in piles or in wind-rows, as it is not apt to be kept straight and in proper order if so left.
